7609, The deaths in this family resulted from an explosion of kerosene oil which occurred Saturday evening, Jan. 25, 1868, at the home of Jonathan Mast, two and a half miles southeast of Farmerstown, O., and three miles west of Sugarcreek, O. There were ten persons present at the time, the Mast family above named, and Daniel Erb, his wife, Caroline Croyle, and their three children, Levi, Menno, and Daniel, Jr. Jonathan Mast and his son Joseph d. the night after the fire. A few days later Susan Helmuth and Menno Erb were laid to rest, the second double funeral as the result of the explosion. A few weeks later the cherished wish of Elizabeth Yoder was granted and she passed away to join her beloved ones. Daniel Erb was severely burned about the hands through his heroic effort of extinguishing the flames which were fast consuming the heavy winter wraps and clothing which were stored in one portion of the room. After the flames were under control he started away to find help. From the top of a hill he was heard calling for help, which soon arrived, but he was unable to return to the scene of the tragedy. Through the snow were left the stains of blood flowing from the fiery injuries, and the frosty rails of the fence where it was crossed tore away the parched skin of the hands. Near by down over the side of the hill was the home of John Stuver, where he arrived, unable to go farther. Six long weeks were passed before he was able to be moved. Then he, his wife and two remaining sons were conveyed on a covered and enclosed sled to their own home four miles away. Caroline, his wife, was severely injured about the face, neck and hands in her effort to extinguish the flames on her infant boys and succeeded in doing so by rolling them about in the snow. She has carried the marks of disfigurement through life. There was not remaining a perfect member on either hand. All the fingers were twisted and drawn out of shape. A lapse of about eighteen months occurred before it was possible for her to do any manual work. Their son, Daniel Erb, Jr., was burned about the scalp and ears. He has since then been without any covering of hair and part of one ear is missing. These details of the catastrophe are furnished by Mrs. Caroline Erb, of Hubbard, Oregon, D J H 2848.
